

Lectionary needs revisions

As chairman of the U.S. Bishops' Committee on Liturgy, I am pleased to tell you that we are making significant progress on a revision of the Lectionary, the Scriptures that we use at Mass on Sundays and during the week.

Bishop Donald W. Trautman

The Lectionary is seriously flawed because it is a strictly literal translation and does not resonate well with our people. The Bishops' Committee on Liturgy sent out a form consulting all U.S. bishops, asking for their input on the present Lectionary. The survey results came back with what we expected: they were overwhelmingly negative.

In our process for revision we have two skilled English professors that are reviewing the text for proclaimability and intelligibility. They sit in the pews and hear the text read. Is it comprehensible? Do the words and sentences flow smoothly for the listener to understand the thought? Once these experts give us their feedback, then it goes to the scripture scholars for further study. This first part of the process looks at what the people in the pews have heard regarding the English translation.

The present translation is quite literal and often not proclaimable, lacking correct idiom and English word order. English words do not make an English translation. There must be consideration of context, nuances of words, idioms and word order. For example, in the present translation the expression "kors of wheat" is used. I doubt if anyone in the church understands the meaning of that technical phrase. It stands for a measurement of wheat, but no one would understand that literal translation. Our committee does not want a paraphrase. That would be just as wrong as the strictly literal translation. What we desire is a translation as close as possible to the inspired text, one that is proclaimable, intelligible and able to be comprehended by the average person at Mass. The present text does not fit that criterion according to the overwhelming response of our bishops responding to the survey of the Bishops' Committee on Liturgy.

The long, involved Greek sentences that St. Paul uses must be put into short sentences. One of the major complaints of the present translation is pronouns are used without proper antecedents. The people in the pews cannot connect the pronouns with the antecedent. We have also found that the "incipit," or the beginning phrase of a gospel, is often omitted because it is a literal translation. A classical example of that is in one of the gospels for Sunday readings. It talks about Jesus "coming down and talking with his apostles." Now if you are sitting in the pew and hearing Jesus is coming down, you would naturally ask, "Is he coming down from the mountain? Is he coming down from heaven?" While the present translation is literally what the Scripture says, you have to go back to the previous sentence and see Jesus coming down from the mountain. Without that connection, you are left in the pew saying, "Where did he come down from?"

Once the revision of the Lectionary is finished, it will be shared with the U.S. bishops for approval and then forwarded to the Vatican. I hope that we can complete the revision within a year. We have already completed all of the Advent and Lenten readings. I have personally gone through all of the Lenten readings and the long Passion gospels, making revisions based on the Hebrew and Greek texts, checking several English translations and looking at the comments of our English scholars. Now we have to start work on Ordinary Time. We also have biblical scholars helping us. It is tedious and detailed work to go through the texts, but that is what we have pledged ourselves to do. All of this work is quite time-consuming, but I am hopeful we can make a difference and give our people at Eucharist not only a faithful translation but also a proclaimable and intelligible rendering of the inspired Scriptures.

Bishops table Mass adaptation proposals

By Jerry Filteau
Catholic News Service

CHICAGO — Despite a lively debate that indicated most bishops favor retaining a series of current U.S. adaptations in Mass prayers, they voted at their June 16-18 meeting in Chicago to delay action on the issue.

They voted 160-70 to table the proposal to seek Vatican approval of those prayers until they receive the planned English translation of the recently published, Latin-language third typical edition of the Roman Missal.

In doing so, it appeared that the bishops may have placed themselves in a classic Catch-22. They said they wanted to wait until they see the new English translation of the entire missal and consider the current prayers only in light of how a decision will relate to that text. But the Vatican has ordered that when vernacular translations of the normative Latin liturgical texts are submitted for Vatican approval, adaptations will be allowed only if they are "foreseen explicitly" in the Latin edition or if "prior written consent has been obtained" from the Vatican to incorporate them.

Under that rule, the bishops could face a dilemma of forgoing the chance to seek continued use of the familiar adaptations to get quick approval for the long-awaited new translation of the entire missal, or else delaying approval of the missal to get prior approval of those adaptations.

The prayers in question have been part of U.S. prayer translations or adaptations in the Mass since 1970. Some are optional alternatives that are not contained in the Latin edition, while others are looser translations of the Latin than would be permitted under stricter translation rules recently issued by the Vatican.

Bishop Donald W. Trautman of Erie, Pa., chairman of the bishops' Committee on Liturgy, said the committee supported seeking Vatican approval for continued use of those texts because they have been part of the "liturgical formation and spirituality of some two generations of U.S. Catholics" and have been pastorally helpful.

One prayer that the committee originally submitted for retention but then withdrew from the package is the popular memorial acclamation following the consecration, "Christ has died, Christ is risen, Christ will come again."

Bishop Trautman said the committee unanimously decided to delete that prayer from the package of texts because, unlike the other acclamations, it was not a translation from any Latin text and it "does not use any pronouns (such as 'we' or 'our') incorporating the people into the paschal mystery."

As a result, he said, that acclamation "doesn't fit the standard (for such acclamations) of 'Liturgiam Authenticam,'" the recent Vatican document giving norms that now govern all liturgical translations from the original Latin texts.

Cardinal Francis E. George of Chicago asked why a prior Latin text was necessary in this case since some other adaptations they were seeking approval for, including four optional penitential formulas, were also original English prayers rather than translations from Latin.

Bishop Trautman said the issue in this case is that the acclamation "does not fit the norm of 'Liturgiam Authenticam.'"

"Those (Vatican norms) are rules of translation," Cardinal George replied. "We are not translating here."

Other bishops argued that even though there is no explicit pronoun in the acclamation, by the very act of proclaiming it the people are incorporating themselves into the paschal mystery.

On a voice vote the bishops overwhelmingly approved reinstating the acclamation into the package of adaptations.

When it came time to vote on the entire package, however, Cardinal George asked if the bishops might not be "creating a needless conflict" since they do not yet know what the English translation of the new Roman Missal will look like and how the proposed adaptations will fit in.

Bishop Trautman reminded him that last year, when the liturgy committee decided to make the proposal seeking advance Vatican approval of those adaptations, "you were chair" of the committee.

"Well, I was wrong," Cardinal George replied.

That provoked a new discussion, resolved when Bishop Nicholas A. DiMarzio of Brooklyn, N.Y., moved, and the bishops agreed, to table the proposal until the whole English translation of the latest edition of the Roman Missal is available to them.

Highlights of bishops' meeting in Chicago

CHICAGO (CNS) — During their June 16-18 spring meeting in Chicago, the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops:

- Approved a revised "Charter for the Protection of Children and Young People."
- Adopted, subject to Vatican approval, a revised version of "Essential Norms" implementing the charter in church law.
- Urged continuing support for the nation's Catholic elementary and secondary schools.

Our service men and women will be getting some correspondence thanks to Chris Jovenitti and her husband Jim of Holy Rosary Parish, Johnsonburg. Chris, director of the Letters From Home Program, is in the midst of organizing a summer postcard campaign running through Aug. 28. Themed A Salute to You from the Red, White and Blue, the campaign is aiming for sending 10,000 postcards from all over the United States.

If you'd like to help, write a note of support to our troops on a postcard and mail them to Letters From Home Program, 6631 Ridgway-Jbg Road, Johnsonburg, Pa., 15845.

Congratulations to seminarians Bill Barron, Max Pawlowski and Justin Pino who celebrated the rite of candidacy at the Emmaus Convocation at St. Vincent College in Latrobe June 20-23. The rite is a public declaration by the seminarians that they are seeking to become candidates for Holy Orders.

CBS plans to air a four-hour miniseries on the life of Pope John Paul II during the 2005-06 television season. The movie, which has not yet been cast, could land on the CBS schedule as early as November. Historians at the Vatican are consulting on the script.

The made-for-TV movie "will begin with Karol Wojtyla's journey from his youth in Poland through his late days on the chair of St. Peter," according to the CBS announcement.

Fr. Levis to hold Catholic Q&A

Fr. Robert Levis, co-host of the popular EWTN cable show Web of Faith, will host a program titled "Catholic Q&A: You've Got Questions, We've Got Answers" on July 13 at 7:30 p.m. in the St. Joseph Community Center, 147 W. 24th St., Erie.

Join Fr. Levis for an engaging and informative discussion about "everything you ever wanted to know about the Catholic faith." Ask questions about moral teachings, common practices and other related topics.

Fr. Levis has also written a book and produced multi-media companion resources regarding the Catholic faith for children entitled Jesus, the Catechism and Me. He is co-founder and vice president of the Confraternity of Catholic Clergy.

Healing theme for July/Aug. issue of Faith magazine

As we prepare to celebrate all things American, watch for the July/August 2005 issue of Faith magazine, scheduled to be delivered to your home next week. Sergeant Brian McGuinness, just back from his tour of duty in Iraq, shares a first-person account of his experience serving overseas.

The theme of healing is woven throughout the publication's fourth issue.

"It's true," writes Faith magazine Executive Editor Msgr. Tom McSweeney in his introductory column. "Every day, God comforts and heals the bodies and souls of his wounded people. The miracle is that he chooses us as his instruments of peace and hope."

The Diocese of Erie sends Faith magazine, free of charge, to the 70,000 Catholic households registered in the diocese on a bi-monthly basis. If you do not receive a copy, please check with your parish to see that your address is current or call the magazine's circulation manager at 814.824.1160.

Good Shepherd marks 50 years

Parishioners at the Church of the Good Shepherd, West Middlesex, celebrated a noon Mass on May 15 in honor of the church's 50th anniversary. Bishop Donald Trautman celebrated the Mass along with pastor Fr. Howard King and former pastors Msgr. Richard Mayer and Msgr. Joseph Riccardo and founding pastor Msgr. Salvatore Mitchell. The parish is planning a pictorial directory that will be available in December.

Above, Bishop Trautman accepts the Mass gifts from Anne Fister and Chester Jazwinski, both founding members of the church.

Businesses donate $750,000 to Catholic education in Erie Diocese

The Student Tuition Assistance Resource (STAR) Foundation announced it has distributed approximately $750,000 in financial assistance to students attending Catholic schools in the Diocese of Erie for the 2005/2006 academic year. A non-profit scholarship organization established by the Erie Diocese, the STAR Foundation is made possible by donations from businesses that participate in the commonwealth's Educational Improvement Tax Credit (EITC) program. All donations benefit the diocesan tuition assistance program, and are never used to bolster operational funds.

According to Charles Banducci, diocesan director of school finance, scholarships are granted to elementary and high school students of all creeds from low- and moderate-income families based solely on financial need. He encourages businesses to take advantage of the program.

"Pennsylvania businesses provide a great education and have a tremendous influence on the youth of our diocese through their donations," Banducci says. "They give disadvantaged students an equal opportunity."

The EITC program is administered by the Pennsylvania Department of Community and Economic Development; details are available on its Web site, which can be found at www.inventpa.com.

Students at 42 schools in the Erie Diocese received tuition grants from the STAR Foundation this year. This does not include money distributed to students in the Clarion area through the Children's Scholarship Fund, another EITC beneficiary.

For more information on the STAR Foundation or on how businesses can contribute, please contact Charles Banducci at 814.824.1188, Joseph Hoag at 814.824.1192 or e-mail starfund@erieRCD.org

Pro-life crusaders walking 1,300 miles from Minneapolis to Erie

While many people are enjoying the summer with picnics and trips to the beach, one group is spending most of it walking from Minneapolis to Erie.

With a goal of bringing an end to abortion and proclaiming the teachings of the Catholic Church, a group from the American Life League is walking the 1,300 miles as part of the Crusade for Life 2005. The national pro-life group, based in Washington, D.C., set up Erie as the destination for its Great Lakes route.

The group is also sponsoring walks in the Northeast from Augusta, Maine, to Washington and in California from San Diego to Sacramento.

The crusade group left Minneapolis on May 29 with July 29 as the scheduled arrival date in Erie.

A typical day for the group, made up mostly of college and high school students, begins between 5-6 a.m. with Morning Prayer and daily Mass. After meeting with pro-life and parish groups, the walking commences with a small group riding a few miles ahead coordinating the next parish visit. Depending on the hospitality of others, the group stays with parishes or families overnight and begins again the next morning. While meals are sometimes provided for the group, they are on their own for food.

"Anytime anybody makes an effort and a sacrifice to draw attention to the injustice of abortion, it's a special thing," says Tim Broderick, president of People for Life, an Erie pro-life group. "It's great when you can get young people involved. Their enthusiasm, optimism and energy has a lot of value. I wish more people would get involved."

Broderick says he looks forward to meeting the group when they get to Erie.

For more information of the walk, visit the group's Web site www.crusadeforlife2005.com.
